WINE SPECTATOR – 10 APRILE 2017

The communes of La Morra and Barolo, located in Piedmont's Langhe hills, produce some of the region's most celebrated Nebbiolo.

HAPPY SURPRISE

Piedmont overcomes an unpredictable 2012 growing season to deliver excellent Barolos • BY BRUCE SANDERSON

The 2012 Barolos from Piedmont's Langhe hills are the leading lights among the new releases from the region, despite nature's challenges during the growing season. The best are elegant, balanced and expressive, offering a mix of fruit and savory elements, with the structure to develop over the medium term.

The current crop of Barbarescos also excel. They hail from 2013, a cool year whose late harvest resulted in complex aromas and finesse. Purity and harmony are common descriptors for these wines, which are generally more approachable than their cousins from Barolo.

Among the top-scoring 2012 Barolos are Massolino's Margheria (96 points, $97), a vibrant red dominated by notes of cherry, mint and earth, and Giacomo Conterno's Cerretta (96, $225), whose complex flavors are allied to a structure with tension and excellent length.

In addition, there are several 2012 Barolos at 95 points: the Luigi Baudana Cerretta ($84), Giuseppe Mascarello & Figlio Monprivato ($165), Bartolo Mascarello ($135), Massolino Parafada ($97), Luciano Sandrone Le Vigne ($155) and Giovanni Sordo Gabutti ($65).

The 2013 Barbarescos are led by the three single-vineyard offerings from Gaja. With the '13 vintage, this estate has changed course. In the past, the wines included some Barbera in their blends, but with this vintage they are 100 percent Nebbiolo. In consequence, they have returned to the Barbaresco DOCG (Denominazione di Origine Controllata e Garantita), with triumphant results.

"Now is time for us to make our own choices," Gaia Gaja told Wine Spectator last July, referring to the new generation at Gaja. "Together we want to follow our own path, which is to have the single vineyards back to the Barbaresco denomination and to devote ourselves to Nebbiolo and fully enhance its expression."

I give an edge to Gaja's Barbaresco Sori Tildin (95, $475) over the Costa Russi (94, $475) and Sori San Lorenzo (94, $475), yet all are scintillating wines.

Also impressive are Moccagatta's Barbaresco Basarin (95, $52), Musso's Barbaresco Pora (94, $38) and Oddero's Barbaresco Galina (94, $60). The Albino Rocca Barbaresco Angelo (94, $101), the first vintage of this wine, is dedicated to the memory of Angelo Rocca, who died when his small plane crashed in 2012.

These are the highlights from nearly 650 Piedmont wines I have reviewed in blind tastings at our New York office since my previous report on the region ("Piedmont Rises to the Challenge," April 30, 2016). In addition to Barolo and Barbaresco, there are multiple vintages of Barbera; Dolcetto from the 2013, 2014 and 2015 harvests; a roundup of Alto Piemonte reds; and a handful of whites. However, Barolo makes up the bulk of the tastings, comprising 35 percent of all Piedmont wines reviewed in the past year. (A free alphabetical list of scores and prices for all wines tasted begins on page 63.)

Barolo represents the engine driving the Nebbiolo train and is a major reason for the rising popularity of this grape variety in the United States. The appellation has enjoyed a string of successful vintages since 1996, with the exception of 2002, when hail wreaked widespread havoc across much of the region just before harvest.

The 2012 harvest was never a sure thing. It was not an easy growing season, and began with extreme cold in February and cooler weather in early spring that delayed flowering. Hail hit Roero in May and the western sector of Barolo in late July and early August, followed by a hot, dry month of August. Much-needed rain at the beginning of September refreshed the vines, and the weather during harvest was fine, with warm days and cool nights. The 2012 yield in general was 20 percent less than average.

Giuseppe Vaira, whose family made four outstanding Barolos and one classic-scoring at the G.D. Vajra and Luigi Baudana estates, calls 2012 a "post-climate change" vintage due to the heat.

"We learned a lot from previous hot vintages—1997, 2000, 2003, 2007 and 2011—and we were very satisfied by the small changes we are introducing on canopy management," Vaira explains. "The most important result was avoiding sunburned berries while keeping enough air movement to let the fruit dry fast after the rains."

"The average temperatures were quite high during the summer and the fall," notes Franco Massolino, who made the top-scoring

Gaia Gaja is overseeing an evolution at her family's winery in Barbaresco, moving toward 100 percent Nebbiolo bottlings and achieving classic scores as a result.

Margheria. Because of the heat, he calls 2012 "an excellent vintage from the weather aspect."

The recent success of Barolo has meant higher prices over the past few vintages, with half a dozen wines exceeding $200. Yet there are still many affordable bottlings. More than one-quarter of the Barolos I reviewed cost less than $60, including the Giacomo Ascheri Barolo 2012 (94, $40), Schiavetta Barolo Cerretta 2012 (94, $53) and M. Marengo Barolo Bricco delle Viole 2012 (94, $53). All are made in small quantities, however. Three that are more widely available are the Ceretto Barolo 2012 (93, $55), G.D. Vajra Barolo Albe 2012 (92, $42) and Vietti Barolo Castiglione 2012 (91, $52).

The Cube at Ceretto's Bricco Roccie winery is meant to showcase Barolo's landscape. The producer released an outstanding and widely available version from the 2012 vintage.

Also on the market are several Barolos from 2010, a stellar vintage that will repay cellaring for another decade. Look for Cavallo's Bricco Boschia Vigna San Giuseppe Riserva 2010 (97, $125) and Vignolo Riserva 2010 (95, $120), as well as Massolino's Vigna Rionda Riserva 2010 (96, $150). These have shut down somewhat, displaying more tannic structure than fruit. From the 2008 vintage, which is beginning to open and reveal freshness and complexity, comes the Aldo Conterno Barolo Granbusia Riserva (96, $60).

Barbaresco is about a third of the size of Barolo, and its wines are less expensive. Most Barbarescos need about seven to 10 years from the vintage to begin revealing all their facets, while Barbarescos typically need five to seven years. In the best vintages, both are capable of lasting for decades.

Produttori del Barbaresco released its single-vineyard riserva from 2011. All deliver fine value at $59; my favorites are the Asili Riserva (96 points), Muncagota Riserva (95), Pora Riserva (95) and Rabaja Riserva (95).

Aldo Vacca, the managing director of Produttori del Barbaresco, says 2011 reminds him of 1990, a vintage that opened the door for Piedmontese wines. "Normally, tannins dominate the fruit in young Barbaresco," he explains. "However, a sweet fruit core is what you will see through the line."

Rating Red Wine Vintages in Piedmont

2012	94	Barbaresco are elegant, balanced and expressive, with fruit and savory elements; elegant, intense, even austere Barbarescos	Drink or hold
2011	93	Rich, fleshy Barbarescos and balanced Barbarescos; the best have vibrant structures for aging. A fine year for Barbera	Drink or hold
2010	97	A cool growing season and ideal weather before harvest; pure, elegant and structured reds, with fine potential for aging	Hold
2009	90	A warm year with inconsistent ripening; the best reds offer immediate fruit and flesh; others show undertone tannins	Drink or hold
2008	94	Warm late season rescued a cooler-than-average growing season; ripe reds show good structure, purity and elegance	Hold
2007	95	A warm, dry year; wines offer flesh and immediate appeal	Drink or hold
2006	95	Many outstanding reds; cool weather made austere, muscular Nebbiolos with aging potential	Drink or hold
2005	91	Balanced and elegant reds, delivering fruit and ripe tannins for producers who worked well in the vineyard	Drink
2004	94	Fresh, harmonious, perfumed reds; hitting its peak now	Drink or hold

Notable older vintages: 1999, 1996, 1990, 1988, 1982, 1974, 1971, 1967, 1964, 1961, 1958

A score range indicates preliminary analysis based on barrel samples and/or a limited sampling; many wines of the vintage had yet to be reviewed.

Vintage ratings: 95-100, classic; 90-94, outstanding; 85-89, very good; 80-84, good; 75-79, mediocre; 50-74, not recommended. Drinkability: "100" means most of the wines of the vintage are yet to be released. "95" means most of the wines of the vintage are ready to drink. "90" means most of the asperity wines have yet to fully mature; "best peak" means most of the wines are drinking rather than improving.

reviews of 60 wines I tasted from Alto Piemonte. Ferrando's Carema Black Label 2011 (93, $83) also excels, though technically it is from Canavese, close to the Valle d'Aosta border, not Alto Piemonte. The Cantine del Castello, Conti Nebbiolo Colline Novaresi 2012 (92, $24) and Monsecco Ghemme 2009 (92, $38) offer value.

Barbera, a grape variety that likes heat, struggled in the cooler years of 2013 and 2014. It comes as no surprise, then, that the best Barberas are from 2012 and 2015, two warmer, dry vintages. The highest-rated Barbera in this report is the Vietti Barbera d'Alba Vigna Scartone 2012 (92, $43), a rich, supple red boasting blackberry, black cherry, leather and spice flavors.

Despite the challenges, there are excellent examples from both 2013 and 2014. A pair of 2013s reveal what can be done in a cooler year. The Podet Colla Barbera d'Alba Costa Bruna 2013 (91, $25) and Aldo Conterno Barbera d'Alba Conca The Pile 2013 (91, $35) top the list of 10 outstanding 2013 Barberas out of 30 reviewed.

The 2014s don't fare as well, with only four of 35 managing to rate outstanding. Plus, the best tend to be pricey. Of the year's 90-plus Barberas, only the Paitin Barbera d'Alba Serra 2014 (90, $22) stands out as a great value. The other three are the Elvio Cogno Barbera d'Alba Pre-Phylloxera 2014 (90, $67), Falletto di Bruno Giacomo Barbera d'Alba 2014 (90, $60) and Luciano Sandrone Barbera d'Alba 2014 (90, $43).

The 2015s, now arriving, show great promise. Nearly half of these young Barberas are outstanding in my tastings this year, led by the Giacomo Grimaldi Barbera d'Alba Paitin 2015 (91, $18).

Dolcetto is the first red variety harvested in Piedmont's Langhe hills, and this characteristically fruity red also likes heat. Fortunately, most of the current Dolcettos are from the hot, dry 2015 harvest. Many Dolcettos carry the Alba DOC, yet in the nearby Dogliani appellation, Dolcetto is the star grape and bears the D.O.C.G. title.

Loretta and Alberto Antonino oversee production at their family estate in the once-obscure Alto Piemonte region. Their three Nebbiolo-based Gattinarae from 2011 represent some of the top wines from the area.

In the 2015 vintage, the Falletto di Bruno Giacomo Dolcetto d'Alba (92, $25) and Quinto Chionetti & Figlio Dogliani Briccolero (92, $26) head the list. Both exhibit black cherry, blackberry and violet flavors, yet while the former is elegant, the latter shows the plushness that Dolcetto achieves in Dogliani. Giacomo Fenocchio's Dolcetto d'Alba (91, $16) delivers excellent value, while Barolo Mascarello Dolcetto d'Alba (91, $30) and Paitin Dolcetto d'Alba Sort Paitin (91, $20) are also worth the search.

Though Piedmont is better known for its reds, the region's whites represent 10 percent of the wines I tasted during the past year. They consist of several indigenous grape varieties, including Cortese (grown primarily in the Gavi D.O.C.G.) and Arneis, plus the more obscure Erbaluce, Favorita, Nascetta and Timorasso. Chardonnay, Riesling and Sauvignon Blanc are also grown.

Several whites earned outstanding ratings. Gaja's Langhe White Gaja & Rey 2014 (92, $230), made from Chardonnay, stands out for its rich texture, spice notes and hefty price tag. The peachy and citrus-flavored Luigi Baudana Langhe White Dragon 2015 (90, $20) is a blend of Chardonnay, Sauvignon Blanc, Nascetta and Riesling. The Elvio Cogno Nascetta Langhe Ana-cetta 2015 (90, $35) and Broglia Gavi La Meina 2015 (90, $25), from 100 percent Cortese, represent fine examples of local grape varieties. G.D. Vajra's Riesling Langhe 2015 (90, $40) is one of the best versions of that grape from Piedmont.

The early-release 2015s show the promise of a vintage in which all the red grape varieties of the region excelled. The next crop of Barolos to be released comes from the fine 2013 vintage, a year that Giacomo Conterno, of his family's Aldo Conterno estate, describes as "a very classic vintage, like 2010 but less tannic and more aromatic." But until these wines become available later this year, there are plenty of Piedmont reds and whites to satisfy fans of the region, from affordable everyday values to high-end collectibles.

Valter Fissore's Elvio Cogno winery in Novello offers a range of outstanding wines in this report, including a Barbera, a Dolcetto and an indigenous white.
